

Laurie Graves

A former TBI patient, works as an independent trainer in Keller, Texas, and provides her services to several contestants featured on NBC's The Biggest Loser. Laurie was treated for stretch-marks and loose skin as a result of losing an amazing 90 pounds at age 43. The treatments she received at TBI provided toning in her muscles and skin tightening that diet and exercise alone could not correct. She believes, "Fitness is not just for cosmetic adaptations; it encompasses health and healing for the whole body."

It's that time of year again. When we diet and exercise like crazy in hopes of losing holiday fat before slipping into those tiny bathing suits for summertime. Unfortunately, we can only run so many miles and cut so many calories before hitting that plateau and the scale stops moving. But what about that extra layer of skin on the back of our arms and stomach? Bathing suits can't camouflage that.

Texas Beauty Institute (TBI) offers "innovative treatment solutions that more effectively treat the fatty tissue that exercise and diet alone cannot address," explained TBI president Nelson Thibodeaux. Cosmetic recovery research from sources around the world has contributed to TBI's treatment methods of muscle and skin rejuvenation that never damage the skin yet achieve remarkable results.

TBI works to restore three essential components by creating muscle memory with a firming and toning microcurrent, elasticity improvement with a topical and painless 40 minute session, and collagen replacement with stimulants used to combat skin that has begun to show wrinkles and fine lines from a deep loss of hydration. Treatments are effective both on the face and body.

A regenerative medicine study through the Department of Defense resulted in the discovery of Elastatropin, a plant bio-tech precursor to human elastin that helps wounded soldiers heal faster. Dr. Burt Ensley further developed this discovery into a consumer skincare product. TBI was selected to research and develop a non-inva-
